Each ball, during all this time, was sur rounded by a faint oblong luminosity, which extended itself somewhat between the two. and thus caused the compound meteor greatly to resemble a dumb bell.

On its first appearance, or emergence from the cloud, it was devoid of a train; but after its separation, as above described, a luminous haze was observed to shoot out behind it which, as the meteor proceeded on its course, gradually extended itself, until it had attained a length of 2°. From the extremity of this tail, sparks were occasionally

As the meteor progressed to the east, the hindmost ball was gradually consumed, and the foremost continually grew dimmer, until, et an altitude of 5°, the entire body faded from view. The disappearance was accompanied by no explosion, nor were there any scintillations shot from either ball, in any part of their progress. The light emitted by the meteor, although not specially remarkable, was nevertheless abundantly sufficient to exhibit a vivid glare, whenever it was momentarily lost from view by the intervention of a house or tree.

As respects its azimuth at the moment of disappearance, reliable observers differ considerably. Thus, one of our students, who active demand for vessels in Philadelphia at the made his observation with especial reference to the determination of this point, reports 554 E. while my friend, A. Jamieson, esq., from whose country seat the meteor was carefully observed, designates a point, which I and by instrumental measurement, to have an eastern azimuth of 82°.

On this point, therefore, I have made a series of experiments with several who witnessed the entire passage of the meteor, and am satisfied it was not in view more than 30 seconds, if, indeed, so long. We noted carefully the time of its disappearance, viz : 9h 38m, p. m. Our latitude may be taken at  $38^{\circ}\ 49^{\circ}\ \mathrm{N_{\odot}}$  and longitude 77 4 W. of Greenwich. THAT METEOR -Our attention was directed to the meteor by a startling exclamation of "what's that!" Looking northwesterly we saw a luminous body gliding majestically due easterly, and apparently not over a hundred vards distant nor more than fifty feet from the earth attaining finally about thrice that altitude. Such was its seeming proximity to the ground that a lady whose view was wholly unobstructed and who noticed its first appearance, supposed that an adjacent barn had been set on fire, or that a 234 inst. lantern was being carried by some one over a field. As it advanced it seemed like a ball of fire of about ten inches in diameter, but ere reaching the zenith it had an elongated shape, and on passing to the east it assumed a dumb-bell form, eliciting the remark "there's two of them.

The balls were seemingly united by a scintilating cord of about 4 by 12 inches, the rear or smaller ball having a comet like erail of some two feet in length and all in pleasurable interchange of thought and feeling, or close contact.
